Embrace Brings Awareness to Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls
 Due to cases going unreported and racial data on missing persons being poorly tracked, the actual number of missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls (MMIWG) across the United States is unknown. Even being underreported, the National Crime Information Center had over 5,000 missing Indigenous women and girls reported in 2016. Only 116 of those were logged into the Department of Justice's national database.
 American Indian women face murder rates that are more than 10 times the national average. Homicide is the 3rd leading cause of death among those ages 1-19 for American Indian and Alaska Native women according to the Centers for Disease Control. These aren't just numbers; they're sisters, daughters, and mothers being taken.
 A taskforce has been formed at both the national and state levels to address the epidemic. But is it enough? Though these groups are prioritizing a critical need, developing a shared database to track MMIWG, advocates emphasize the importance of resources also going toward prevention and healing.
 According to the National Institute of Justice, 56% of Native Women have experienced sexual violence, and 49% have experienced stalking. In addition, 96% of Native female victims of sexual violence experienced violence at the hands of non-Native harm doers.
 The pervasiveness of this injustice represents a dire need to (1) address the systemic barriers that allow this horrific reality to persist and (2) amplify the voices of MMIWG advocates and families that work tirelessly to share their stories, demanding justice and the restoration of safety.
 The National Indigenous Women's Resource Center (NIWRC) is organizing a National Week of Action (May 1st - 7th) to raise awareness about MMIWG. We must rise up to challenge the inaction and silence of those in power in response to the crisis of MMIWG.
 You can get involved by sharing a photo of yourself on social media wearing red and/or traditional attire. Make sure to use hashtags #MMIWGActionNow, #NoMoreStolenSisters and #MMIWG.
 Red is the official color of the #MMIW campaign because in various tribes, it is known to be the only color spirits can see. It is hoped that by wearing red, the missing spirits of the women and children will be called back home.
 You can also purchase the 2023 No More Stolen Sisters poster. All net proceeds go towards NIWRC's mission to end violence against Native women and children by providing culturally grounded resources, training, technical assistance, and policy development. For a complete list of events, registration information, and downloadable resources, check out <https://www.niwrc.org/mmiwnatlweek23>. Join us in saying 'enough is enough'—not one more stolen sister.
